Can Immigrants help make Canada more Competitive?

Conference encourages leveraging international skills

Toronto – On March 3rd, immigrant professionals are invited to attend the 14th annual conference for Internationally Educated Professionals (IEPs). Moderated by CBC's Marivel Taruc, the conference provides resources and insight for skilled immigrants looking to leverage their global skills in the Canadian job market.

Get Connected. Don't miss out on great opportunities to get connected with prospective employers and like-minded immigrant professionals.

Know your value. Employers and government program administrators are realizing that to stay competitive in the global market, they need to tap into highly skilled immigrants that have made Canada their home. This conference offers opportunities to learn key strategies on how to leverage your international experience and global skills.

Conference attendees will be able to explore resources in various sectors, including Engineering; Finance and Accounting; Healthcare; Sales, Marketing and Communications; and Information Technology.

Opportunities include:

- Getting connected with other professionals and employers to forge new links
- Gaining insight and practical information from panel experts and successful IEPs
- Asking questions at skill building sessions

Come join us for the 14th successful year of this unique event. See event details below.
